Built around health: The impact of COVID-19 on urbanism

Join the AIA Regional and Urban Design Committee for a series of timely conversations on public health and urban design. Interdisciplinary experts will discuss how the pandemic is challenging traditional notions of urbanism, and the problems and opportunities this presents the design profession.

Sessions are à la carte and will cover:

- novel implementation strategies for the building, block, and city
- perspectives from leading academics on how our interactions with the world shape health, well-being, and behaviors
- policy insights underscoring the ways COVID-19 affects vulnerable populations

October 20-22, 2020

Cost: $25/session
Earn up to 6 LU/HSW
