All attendees will be eligible to receive AIA continuing education for attending this course by completing the electronic form sent via email after the conference.

Continuing education questions can be directed to aaj@aia.org.

Course Description

With the transparency demanded by communities, public safety design must respond to a culture where communications are instantaneous and context becomes imperative to effective policing. The psychological impact of policing, both for the police department and the public, has increased due to the constant pressure applied by mobile access to the internet and the proliferation of cameras. Public safety design must react to these new psychological factors. This case study, panel discussion, highlights intentional responses to mitigate this impact.

- How public safety facilities are a respite for the police department
- How the layout of the facility is used to increase effective communications within the department
- How the community and police department can be safely integrated into the use of the facility
- How facilities can promote partnerships among members of the community and the police department
- Create a facility that has an identity for both the department and the community

Learning Objectives

1. Understand how design of 21st century Public Safety Facilities should respond to generational staff influences
2. Identify how social media can impact the operations and identity of a department
3. Discover design opportunities to use a Public Safety Building as a means to effectively build relationships within a community
4. Perceive how the layout of a Public Safety Building can influence communication within a department

No one in the country handles mass crowd events like the NOPD. No arrests, no major violence. No accident.
